You're probably thinking: so what does a typical WRVS volunteer do?

The fact is there's no simple answer to that question. We provide many different services all over the UK — most of them for older people. Broadly speaking, our services can be divided into four areas: home, community, hospitals and emergency support.

As well as front-line volunteering roles to support our service users, there are opportunities to help develop our people, increase our fundraising income and raise our profile. So if you'd like to help us with things like HR, communications, recruitment, finance, fundraising, marketing and training, please do get in touch.

Volunteering to make life better

ig more with your life? Are you wasting your leisure time? Doing the same thing all the time? Over 60,000 people from all over the country have felt the same way. They've become WRVS volunteers, got involved in local activities and developed new skills. Most importantly they have reduced loneliness and older people enjoy life more.

Just a couple of hours every week or fortnight during the day, over an evening or at a different time you can help, too. As one of the largest volunteering organisations we have a wide variety of volunteering opportunities. We're sure to be able to find something that suits you. That's the attraction of being a WRVS volunteer.

Explore this site and see what we have to offer. Once you're ready to start volunteering, click the Volunteer now button to get the ball rolling.

WRVS –Volunteer Campaign Microsite

WRVS has a big goal: to be seen as one of the largest volunteering organisations in the UK, change the public's perception that their volunteers are predominately white, female and over fifty, and to recruit 10,000 volunteers in 2007.

A detailed microsite is providing the perfect medium for this ongoing campaign, effectively disseminating the all information needed to their wide target audience – initially students, people in work, early retirees, and existing volunteers who would refer friends and/or family. Press and marketing material has been designed to prick people's curiosity in using their free time differently, driving them to the site where they can see exactly what WRVS does and how varied the volunteering opportunities are, as well as read case studies and apply online. We were awarded the whole project based on the strength of the work – high praise indeed.
